 - b. Discussion of objectives' value; initial prioritization, and follow-up actions
 - c. Consideration of an internal "Charter" definition

Cindy Dewitt provided the committee with written documentation on long and short term goals prior to the meeting. The committee discussed potential goals including assisting staff with setting up some sort of public education campaign and the different ways the City could communicate with the public, the recycling center's goals already defined by City staff in prior handouts, any additional goals the committee may want to add, a reference case and how success from recycling should be defined, and the lack of clarity of the committee's purpose. The committee requested background information and specific numbers for the recycling center from City staff so they can continue to move forward.

Dr. Cole provided some background information on Council's discussion when the committee was created, including: one of the main things the committee should be doing is to make sure items are actually being recycled; the committee needs a baseline and disposition of items coming into the recycling center; and what processes can be tweaked to ensure items are actually recycled. Cindy Dewitt advised the new contracts for commodities will include requirements that the City receives reports on the disposition of items. Historically, that has not been required from the vendors. Scott Van Slyke reported that City staff is creating new processes, separating items such as tin and aluminum, seeking out new vendors to start new processes, and getting reporting information.

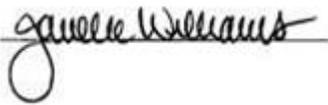

The committee would like information on the contamination rate, how much is being taken to the landfill vs. being recycled, and baseline information using January 1st as a reference. The committee suggested that public education should include what items are recyclable and why certain products are not accepted. Education should come in pieces rather than in a huge campaign. Dr. Cole suggested that perhaps the City's Public Information Officer could put some videos together. The committee expressed an interest in taking a field trip to the recycling center.
